SOME SMILES

No Noise

There are some people in this world who just can't stand any noise whatsoever. They are so sensitive that if you even dropped a pin on the floor they would be annoyed. So such a person, who was a millionaire, built an apartment house. Only for people who agreed to make no noise whatsoever. This young man wanted to rent an apartment in that building. The agent spoke to him.

"You understand that we allow no pets here. No dogs, no cats, no birds, not even fish in a tank."

"I understand all of that," replied the young man.

"If you snore at night, we will tell you to leave. We put that in the lease. No radio or TV set allowed. You may not even play records on a record player. You understand?"

"I understand very clearly just what you have told me," said the young man getting a bit annoyed.

"Every room must have carpet at least 5 inches thick," continued the agent. "And you must wear rubber soles and heels on all of your shoes. Furthermore, no musical instruments of any kind tolerated." That means no piano, no violin, no guitar, and no drums. We want absolutely quiet in this building. Is it clear?"

"Very clear," sighed the young man. Who wondered if in an accident he could call for help. He decided this was no place for him. So looked very sternly at the agent.

"I want to be very honest with you," he told him. "There is a possibility that once a week I may make noise. When I write a letter to my parents my fountain pen does scratch a wee bit."

Flying High

There were two ducks that lived in a pond. With them was a fresh water tortoise. They were very good friends and everything was friendly in that little pond. Then one summer the sun was very strong. And there was little rain. The water level began to go down.

"I must have a pond or I will die," sighed the poor tortoise. "What am I going to do? Where can I go?"

"I will fly and see if I can find another pond," said one of the ducks. "Don't worry. We won't leave a good friend like you behind us."

So the one duck took off from the pond. And then came back the next day with his report. "There is a special pond at the side of the water reservoir where we can all go and live comfortably."

"But I can't fly at all," pointed out the tortoise. "How do I get there under those conditions?"

"Hold on to my feathers with your mouth," said one of the ducks.

"I am strong enough to fly with you. So you have no worry at all."

The tortoise did as he was told. And soon the two ducks were flying to their new pond. People on the road stopped at the strange sight.

"Look, look! There is a tortoise flying. What a wonderful creature. A flying tortoise!"

This made the tortoise feel vain. So he opened his mouth to tell the people how great he was. And thus he fell down to earth!

MORAL: One should know when to keep one's mouth closed

Teacher Has the Answer

There are teachers that kids like and there are teachers that kids do not like. But either way, there is one thing that kids will often grudgingly admit. That somehow teachers do know the answers to things. And when a kid tries to act "smart", teacher can handle the situation.

Little Ben was angry. He had received a scolding from his father in the morning. For not washing behind his ears. So he took it out on teacher by acting up in class. At lunch time teacher spoke to him.

"You are just like my father," complained the boy. "You don't know anything much about being young."

"Of course I do," smiled teacher. "You are only nine years of age. So that means you have been young for only nine years. Now I am past the age of nineteen almost twice. So you will have to admit that I have been younger a longer period of time than you have."

By the expression on Little Ben's face you could see that he was doing his best to figure this one out. Then he shook his head sadly.

"I figure you are correct. But I don't like old people like you. That's all there is to it. You are cranky and mean."

"You admitted you were young," corrected the teacher. "Now I admit I am old. But you are not old. You have a long way to go before you get old. So being old myself and you being young, you have to admit I also know much more about being old than you do."
